New York, March 31. A despatch from Utica states that the express messenger, named Lake, or the West Shore road which arrived there at 1.16 last night, was lying to the car bleeding profusely from a wound in his shoulder.

While the train was making the run between Ciark's mills and Utica, whileh only occupied seven microtes, a man entered the car and ordered tar messenger to throw up his hands. (The latterdid not at once comprehend him and the trobber shot him and rifled the safe but the amount secured is not known.

The local expressman could not open the door when the car reached here and his snapicions were aroased. He forced Continuance in Active Service.

The total original cost of the vessel was $503,650. The estimates of the construction burean for repairs are less than seventeen per cent. of the cost of replacing the vessel, but extensive repairs to her machinery are necessary. The Hartford has one of the brightest records of any vessel in the service. She was built at Boston in 1859 and served in many engagements during the last war and it was on board this ship, lashed in the mizzen rigging, that Farragut passed the forra below New Orleans. Two other wooden yeasels, relicts of the war, have just passed surveys. The Ossipee is now teing repaired at Norfolk and the Kenrsarge is lying at Portsmouth, M. She will recover but will be disfigured for life. An Interesting Case.

An Interesting Case.

A most interesting case has been on triat in the Superior Court the last two days, known as the Haverhill dowry case. This is a case in which the widow of Hiraca Peaslee, of Haverhill, claims a dowry. Defendants, children of Mr. Peaslee, claim that the plaintiff forfeited all claim to dowry by in ante-unptial contract. Plaintiff in answer to this claims that her signature to this tentract was obtained by fraud and is therefore null, wherefore she now sues for dowry as given by law. R. B. Shepherd, of Skowhegan. The principal matter of consideration was the question of erecting the new Agricultural building, selecting a location, etc After inspecing the grounds it was decided to take the position north of President Fernald's residence, where stands the society building of the Q. T. V. Society, which will be removed to another location. It was decided to commence at once preparations for the erection of the building, and a committee of the Trustees, consist ing of W. T. Haines, Q. H. Thing and C. W. Keeys was appointed, to have full charge of the construction, and to at once select an architect to draw plans, make struction of the building.

The building is to be of brick, two stories high with French roof, and the dimensions to be about 40x60 feet, for the main building with an ell, for cabinet, 38x45. CHAPTER XII,

QVER IT

On leaving the house Bessie and John took their way down the long avenue of blus gums. This avenue was old Kilas Croft's particular pride, for although it had only been planted for about twenty years, the trees, which in the divine climate and virgin foll of the Transvas grow at the most extraordinary rate, were for the most part very lofty, and as thick in the stem as English eats of 150 years' standing.

"What are you thinking of, Bessie" he asked.

She looked up, and he saw that her line were quivering a little "Well, do you know she said," I was, eddly enough thinking of my mother. I can only just remember her a woman with a thin, sweet face. I ret remember her a woman with a thin, sweet thing the at is now and I was playing by her when sud lendy she called me to her and kissed me and then pointed to the red clouds that were guthered in the sky, and said. I woulder if you will ever think of me, dear, when I have passed through those golden gates! I did not understand what she meant then, but somethew I have remembered the words, and though she died so long sign. I do often think of her " and two large tears rolled down her face as she spoke. For men can bear to see a sweet and pretty woman in tears, and this little medent was too much for John whose caution and doubts all went to the winds together, and have not since been heard of "Bessie he said "don't cry, their please don't! I can them to see you cry."

She looked up as though to re-ionstrate at his words, and then looked downsigan.

"Listen Bessie," he went on, awkwardly enough, "I have got something to say to you. I you have my hard and chicken, dear, and I have hocked about. Absolutely Pure

But, Bessia, I never met such a sweet womar, rr, if you will let me say it, such a lovely woman as you and if you will have me, dear, I think that I shall be the lucklest man in South Africa " and he stopped, not exactly knowing what else to say, and the time had not come for action if indeed it was to come at all.

When she first realized the drift of his talk Bessie had flushed up to the eyes and then the blood had sunk back to her breast and lefs her as pale as a lily. She loved the man, and ghey were happy words to her, and she was satisfied with them though pertaps some women might have thought that they left a good deal to be desired.
But Bessie was not

You are different to me you are a man of

would be ashamed of me and my colonial

Somebow the mention of Jess jarred upon John's nerves and chilled him like a breath of cold wind on a hot day. He wanted to put Jess out of he mind just now
"My dear Bessie," he broke in, "why do you

"Oh, yes, I may be good looking! I don't say that I am.not, but can't you understand I don't want you to marry me just because I am a pretty woman, as the Kaffirs marry their wives. If you marry me at all I want you to marry me obt all I want you to marry me obt all I want you to marry mo because you care for me, the real me—not my eyes and my hair. Oh, I don't know what to answer you! I don't, indeed!" and she began to cry softly "Benis, done Bessie!" said John, who wan pretty well beside himself by this time, "just tell me homestly—do you care attout me! I am not worth ment, I know, but if you do, all this just goes for nothing," and he took her hand and drew her toward, him, so that she half slipped, helf got off the sod wall and stood face to face with him, for she was a tall woman, and they were very nearly of a beight.

with a cry;

"th, John, I love you with all my heart?"
And now I think that we may drop a wall of them.

(Infine it to say that they say, there side it is the said works at the family on that fell wall, and were a happy on here is the said work of the property of the property of the said work of the said work

Meanwhile a very different scene was being macted up at the house, half a mile away Not more than ten minutes after John and enacted up at the house, half a mile away. Not more than ten minutes after John and his lady love had departed ou that fateful walk to look at the young trees, Frank Muller's stalwart form, mounted on his great black horse, was to be seen lekurity advancing toward the blue gum avenne. Jantie was lurking about between the stems of the trees in the peculiar fashion that is characteristic of the Hottentot, and which doubtless is bred into him after tens of centuries of tracking animals and hiding from Sees. There he was, slipping from trunk to trunk and garing round him as though be expected each instant to discover the assegned of an ambushed foe or to hear the footfall of some savage beast of prey There was absolutely no reason why he should be carrying on in this fashion, he was simply indulging his natural instincts where he thought nobody would observe him. Life at Mooifontein was altogether too tame and civilized for Jantje's taste and he abcolutely needed periodical recreations of this sort, Like a civilized child he longed for wild teasts and enemies, and if there were none handy he found a reflected subsfaction in making a pretense of their presence.

Presently, however, while they were yet a long way off, his quick ear caught the sound of the horse's footfalls, and he straightened himself and listened. Not satisfied with the results, he land himself down, put his ear to the ground and gave a gutteral grunt of salistaction.

JOHY, I LOVE YOU WITH MY WHOLE HEART Baas Frank's black horse," he muttered to uself The black horse had a gracked heel and one foot hits the ground more softly than the others. What is Beas Frank coming lague for? After missie Ressie! I think He would be mad if he knew that missie went downyto the plantation with Beas Nic! just now? People go into plantations to kiss each other (Jantje was not far out there), and it would make Beas Frank mad it he knew that. He would strike me if I told him or I would tell him."

The horse is hoofs were getting near by now a bantle shipped as easily and naturally as a snake into a thick tuft of rank grass that grew between the line gurns and wanted. Presently the big hirse approached and the snake like Hottentot raised his beauly ever so little and peered out with his beady blace eyes through the straw like grass stome. They fell on Muller's cold face. It was evident that he was in a reflective mood—in an augrily reflective mood.

What is Beas Frank timiting of I won der's said Jantje to himself as hivse and man passed within four feet of him. Their rising, he crossed the road, and shipping round by a back was like a fox from a covert was standing at the stable door with a vacant and utterly unobservant expression of face some secon is before the black horse and its rider had real hed the house.

I will give them one more chance just one more. Thought the han home Boer, or rather haif breed for it will be remembered that his mother was English 'afid if they won't take it then let then fate be upon their own heads. Formorrow I go to the by makara at Paradue Kraal to take counsel with Paul Krugei and Pratorus, and the other fathers of the land as they call them selves. If I throw in my weight against rebelian there will be not rebell on if I urge it there will be no rebell on if I urge it there will be not rebell on if I urge it there will the first of the land as they call them selves. Bahl those are not the things I would kill them all if they stood in my was, all except Bessee II would all be afraid. And it is not my fauit. Can I help it if llove that woman't he would all be afraid and it and strength and we shall see"— Just then be reached the veranda of the house, and dismissing has secret ambitions from his mind Frank Muller dismounted and entered. In the sitting room he found Silass Croft reading a newspaper

"Good day, Om Silas," he said, extending his hand.

"Good day, Om Silas," he said, extending his hand
"Good day Membee Frank Muller," re-plied the old man coldly for John had told him of the incident at the shooting party which had so nearly ended fatally, and though he had made no remark be had formed his own conclusions. his own conclusions.

which had so nearly ended fatally, and though he had made no remark he had formed his own conclusions.

"What are you reading in The Volkstem Om Silas—about the Bezindenhout affair"

"No what was that?"

"No what was that?"

"It was that the volk are rising against you hinglish that is all. The sheriff sound Bezindenhout's wagon in execution of taxes, and put it no to sale at Pot helstroom But the volk kicked the auctioneer off the wagon and hunted him round the town and now Governor Tannon is sending Ranf down with power nor Tannon is sending Ranf down with power nor Tannon is sending Ranf down with power to sweer in special constitutes and enforce the law at Pochefstroom. He might as well try to stop a river by throwing stones. Let me see the big inceting at Pearle k-raal was to have been on the flitteenth of December now it is to be on the eighth, and then we shall see if it will be peace or war?"

"Peace or war?" answered the donnar, testily "That has been the cry for years.

How many big meetings have there leen since Shepstome annexed the country? Six, I think. And what has come of it? Suppose the Boers did fight, what would the end of it be? They would be beaten, and a lot of people would be killed, and that would the cut of it. You don't suppose that England would give into a handful of Boers, do you? What did Gen. Wolseley say the other day at the dumor at Potchefstroom? Why, that the country would have be be given in the best propose that England would give into a handful of Boers, do you? What did Gen. Wolseley say the other day at the dumor at Potchefstroom? Why, that the country would inser be given in the best propose that England would give into a handful of Boers, do you? What did Gen. Wolseley say the other day at the dumor at Potchefstroom? Why, that the country would have be given in the use of all the talk agd childishness? Tell me that, Frank Muller?"

Muller laughed as he timeword, "You are all teep did to them, the like a wolse have been some thing, so what is the sole of the them, the li canas. Or course all these needings and talk are got up. The people are angry because of the English way of dealing with the natives, and because they have to pay taxes, and they think that, now that you English have paid their debta and anisshed up Sikukuni and Cetewayo, they would like to have the land back. They were glad enough for you to take it at first, now it is another matter. But still that it not much. If they was left to it at first, now it is another matter. But still that is not much. If they were left to themselves nothing would come of it except talk, for many of them are very glad that the lind should be English. But the men who just the string are down in the Cape. They want, to drive every Englishman out of thought Africa. When Shepstone amend the "Thuswand he turned the scale injains" the Dates also injained the Dates also injained the Dates also in the place they tools are starring the people up. They mean to make them fight how, and I think that they will succeed. If the Boers win the day they will declare themselves; if not, you will hear nothing of them, and the Boers will hear the brust of it. They are very curning people, the Cope 'patriots,' but they look well after themselves."

Situs Croft looked troubled and made no enswer, and Frank Muller rose and stared out of the window.
